

Dear Friends:

NOTABLE RESEARCH OF THE WEEK

Marriage Rates and Educational Achievement

U.S. adults with a Bachelor's degree are most likely to be married. Although marriage rates have declined across all education groups in the last 25 years, it has declined significantly less for those with a Bachelors degree or higher, according to the Pew Research Center.

NEW IN MARRIPEDIA THIS WEEK

New Entry: Effects of Cohabitation on Children

Cohabiting families are significantly less stable than married families, and therefore jeopardize children's health, safety, and economic security. Continue reading...

BLOG: The Source and Power of Human Capital

Human Capital drives material and financial capital, across all the economies of the world. But what is the source of human capital? In three words: great long-term relationships. Continue Reading...
