NEW RESEARCH HIGHLIGHTS

Americans' View on Abortion

The majority of American adults (54 percent) believe abortion should be illegal, or legal in only a few circumstances, according to a recent GALLUP report.

Child Poverty Risk During a Recession

Children with unmarried parents frequently fall into poverty during a recession. Compared to Australian, Canadian, Irish, and British children, American children--particularly those with cohabiting parents--are especially hit by the poverty penalty, report researchers at Oregon State University and Carleton University.

Similarity between Children's and Parent's Values

Children of parents who prioritize pro-social ideals (helping, caring for others, etc.) over self-promotion (achievement, power, etc.) are more likely, as adults, to share these values with their parents, according to researchers at the University of Westminster, the University of Austria, and the University of Bern.

Chastity and the Future of the First Amendment

The family is the most sexual of all organizations. But given the sexual chaos of modern times, new families who want to succeed in their task of child-raising must quickly find a community of other families of like mind. They are most likely to find such families at their place of worship if the sexuality taught there is a family and child centered sexuality. Continue Reading...
