

Dear Friends:

INCREASING INTERGENERATIONAL SOLIDARITY FOR THE ELDERLY

Between 1995 and 2017 the percentage of older parents living with their married children has doubled. Continue reading...

DECREASING INTERGENERATIONAL SOLIDARITY FOR THE YOUNG (18-34)

“Belonging” in America is decreasing among young adults. A University of Georgia small survey and a recent Census study both tell a similar story: Young adults are less and less inclined to marry and have children. They are rejecting the much happier route and much more fertile way of life. When they age (see above) they will not have the family to belong to and rely on.

BLOG: GROWING TRUST

Recently, I led a group of young parents in a case study designed to teach them how to handle a three-year-old when he is throwing a temper tantrum. The parents in the case study were dealing with their first child and made several typical mistakes. Continue reading...
