FAITH & FAMILY

"The best method I can use to bring my son into my faith is to provide a living model of religious life, of a passionate and caring life, that he will feel comfortable in."

– Rabbi Avremi Zippel

The Essential Role of Fathers as the Spiritual Leader of the Family

A Swiss study found that if a father does not go to church – no matter how faithful his wife – only one child in 50 will become a regular worshipper. If a father does attend church regularly, regardless of the mother's practice, between two-thirds and three-quarters of their children will become churchgoers well into adulthood. If fathers take their faith seriously, then their children will too.

Religious Fathers, Religious Kids Findings Transcend Race

A 2016 study found that among African American families, fathers' religiosity predicted their children's beliefs and practices. This study found that African American fathers' beliefs were positively associated with their sons' beliefs. An additional finding showed that fathers who practiced their faith were more likely to have children who shared the same level of religious involvement.

Fathers Impact Their Kids' Religious Views

Research conducted over multiple decades found that fathers pass down their religious views to their children. In fact, this research found that a crucial factor in whether a child keeps the faith is the presence of a strong father-child bond.

A Father's Faith Solidifies Children's Religious Identity

A Pew study found that a father who shares the same faith as his wife was more likely to have children who share their parents' faith. For instance, among adult children with parents who have the same religious affiliation and who said that religion was important to their family had a high likelihood of identifying with the same religion as their parents.

The Intellectual Service of the Marxist Feminists of the 1960s:
Identifying the Core.

As I have said many times, Mallory Millett's 2014 essay "Marxist Feminism's Ruined Lives" is the most important reportage of the 20th century because it leaves for history an insider's view of the work that is by now well on its way to brining down Western Civilization. These highly intelligent and highly educated women were hellbent on completing Marx and Engle's work by doing what so many (Lenin and Stalin included) could not do: destroy the family and religion, the two biggest obstacles to international materialist socialism. These women burrowed deep to find the 'epicenter' of society's functioning and found it in the marital/sexual act of intercourse, where new life and the next generation of a society begins.
